The girl If her statement of cruel and unusual treatment be true.

Mrs. Daly is at present lying seriously ill at the residence of Charley Post, the steeplechase jockey, at Gravesend. Mrs. Daly alleges that her illness is the result of her husband's cruel treatment. He abandoned her, she says, July 9.

Her story is that July 8 her husband came home in a fearful temper. She was in bed at the time, but she says that Daly grabbed her by the arms, yanked her out of bed and after kicking her several times dragged her about through the different rooms of the house.

She alleges that she stood this treatment several hours, but finally became so frightened at her husbands crazy actions that at 4 o'clock in the morning she fled from the house and walked a mile to her son-fullaw Post's house.

She further says that as she left "Father Bill" gave her a clip on the head with his fist and told ber that she would remember him by that.

She said the Commissioner, "Nobody except the reporters," answered the girl. She said she had not been advised by anybody or that any support had been promised her. Cross-examined by Lawyer Grant, Johanna said she had talked louder than usual on that evening, and that the officer had told her not to bother him.

nied that he had struck the girl with a club or anything else.

He charged her with collecting a large crowd by her loud talk. He didn't want to arrest her, but he had to do so, as she yelled and made a great commotion.

He excused his neglect to answer Miss Young's charge in the court-room on the ground that he had not had the opportunity to do so.

In a voice just above a whisper Bleoo swore that all Judge Patterson said in dismissing the case was that the girl was discharged. This ended the testimony.

Decision was reserved.

Josephine was a dark, thin girl who a year ago suffered from an attack of typhus fever, which left her in a morose frame of mind. She had but few friends, and passed her time in almost incessantly strumming on the piano, although she was not a musical student.

On Monday she locked the door of her room, and the janitor soon heard the report of a pistol. Bursting in the door he found the girllying on the floor dead.

Josephine had aimed straight at her heart, and the flash from her pistol had set fire to her dress.
